Pole Shed

Exterior

This one and one-half story building is constructed of wood poles, approximately 10" in diameter with 2x6 and 2x10 wood framing running horizontally between the vertically set poles. The poles act as pilings and serve as the foundation of the building. The wall framing is covered with corrugated metal panels. The poles also support a nearly flat shed roof framed and sheathed to match the walls. There are no doors, rather the south side of the building is open. External light is admitted to the building through same opening. It was built during the 1970s of new materials.<sup>1</sup> It is identical in construction materials and techniques to the two calf sheds.

Interior

The interior is of exposed wood pole and lumber framing and is unfinished.

Existing Condition

The building is in fair condition at the present time. High winds have torn some of the metal panels from the framing.
